"Do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come to you by the grace of God."—Phillips Brooks.

To Florence H. Stone, teacher and friend, the Class of 1930, in profound admiration and loyal fellowship, dedicates this Journal

TAUNTON HIGH SCHOOL

EDITOR'S - DESK

The Class of 1930

It is now four years since we began our high school course together. In those early first days 1930 seemed a far-away goal, but we started out bravely to chart our course, five hundred strong.

From the very first we realized that deep and lasting foundations were to be laid. Although many have fallen beneath the load, the steadfast spirit within us has never failed. Four years together, working often under serious handicaps, have brought their reward. We have learned the value of friendship, and the joy of working together for a common end. We hope we have learned many things out of books, but we know we have learned valuable lessons not in books.

In the days to come we must remember that we have left one school only to enter a larger one; we have laid down one responsibility only to adjust ourselves to others. Yet as we go our way to attempt new tasks, we trust that the strength and beauty that have come to us in our high school days will abide with us forever.

GAUDEAMUS IGITUR

When all too soon our years are done,
And like dead leaves the months have flown,
The Tree that bore them will have blown
Too brief a time beneath the sun!

For happiness so proudly won Shall we in sorrowing atone,

When all too soon our years are done, And like dead leaves the months have flown?

Why should we wish them just begun?
When they began, we should have known
They'd end one day. Then why make moan,
And sadden every fleeting one,

When all too soon our years are done?

PAUL MACKENDRICK, '30.

The Meaning of 1630

SAMUEL D. KNOX, '30.

The high school graduate of 1930 is justified in asking pointed questions about the Tercentenary observance. He has heard several rather indefinite phrases—such as "our debt to the Puritans" and "the birth of constitutional government"—but he must endeavor to get a clear conception of the reasons which made the founding of Massachusetts an event of transcending importance. Why was it more significant than the settlement of any of the other original thirteen states? Such a celebration as the Tercentenary, renders a great public service, in helping to make known the history and the meaning of our early American life.

First of all, then, a sketch of the founding of the Massachusetts Bay Colony seems necessary. In "The Founding of New England," James Truslow Adams says: "In 1628, affairs in England were evidently approaching a crisis, due to the incompetence of Charles I, with its disgraceful military failures abroad, and its illegal financial exactions at home. No one was safe from the ruin of his fortune or the loss of his freedom. The time had thus come when the King must face a united opposition of the soundest men in the country—of those who feared alike for their property, their liberty, and their religion."

At this time a paper consisting of arguments for and against settling a plantation in New England was being circulated among a group of Puritans. The reasons given in favor of it were mainly religious and economic. The document, which has come down to us in at least four different forms, was possibly drafted by John Winthrop himself, but it has also been attributed to the Reverend John White and others. Several copies, one of them indorsed "May, 1629", contains memoranda of "Particular considerations in the case of J. W.," in which he wrote that the success of the plan had come to depend upon him, for "the chiefe supporters (upon whom the rest depends) will not stire without him." and that his wife and children are in favor of it. His meanes," moreover, he wrote, "heer are so shortened (now 3 of his sonnes being come to age have drawen awaie the one half of his estate) as he shall not be able to continue in that place and imployment where he now iss, his ordinary charg being still as great almost as when his meanes was double": and that "if he lett pass this opportunitie,

That talent wch God hath bestowed uppon him for publiche service is like to be buried."

Winthrop's reasons have been dwelt upon, because, in the motives given by him who was the purest, gentlest, and broadest-minded of all who were to guide the destinies of the Bay Colony, we presumably find the highest of those which animated any of the men who sought its shores.

In March, 1629, a royal charter was granted, creating a corporation, under the legal style, of the "Governor and Company of Massachusetts Bay in New England." In July, Isaac Johnson, a brother-in-law of the Earl of Lincoln wrote to Emanuel Downing, a brother-in-law of Winthrop, asking them to meet at Sempringham, the Earl's seat in Lincolnshire, whither they both went on the 28th. There they undoubtedly met Dudley, Johnson, Humphrey, and others of that family and social group. All those gathered there, so far as we know, were keenly interested in the project for Massachusetts. A few weeks later on August 26th, Saltonstall, Dudley, Johnson, Humphrey, Winthrop, and seven others signed an agreement by which they bound themselves to be ready with their families and goods by the first of the following March, to embark for New England, and to settle there permanently.

There was one clause in the agreement, of incalculable importance. "Provided always," so it read, "that before the last of September next, the whole Government, together with a patent for the said plantation, be first by an order of court legally transferred and established to remain with us and others which shall inhabit upon the said Plantation."

After much debate and the taking of legal advice, the court finally voted that the charter and government might be removed to America. By such transfer and the use made of the charter in New England, what was intended to be a mere trading company, similar to those which had preceded it, became transformed into a self-governing commonwealth, whose rulers treated the charter as if it were the constitution of an independent state.

In October, in contemplation of the removal of the government to América, Winthrop was elected Governor, and Humphrey, Deputy, in place of those who were to remain behind. Eight months later in the early summer of 1630, Winthrop and a band of between nine hundred and a thousand immigrants landed in America, and settled what were later known as the towns of Charlestown, Boston, Medford, Watertown, Roxbury, Lynn, and Dorchester.

It would be untrue to say that John Winthrop and his companions in settling Massachusetts in 1630, knowingly established the fore-runner of the modern state. But it is true to say that in and about Boston they planted the seeds of democracy, which a hundred and fifty years later grew into the American nation, and during the years since then have materially influenced the political theories and practices of the entire world.

In bringing with them to Boston the charter which Charles I of England had granted to "the Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England," they definitely proposed to establish a self-governing community in the New World. To the English king, whom they disliked on moral grounds, they acknowledged a formal loyalty, but there is no doubt that they envisioned an independent state conducted along the lines of their Calvinist beliefs. Religious qualifications, rigorous and sharp, existed to be sure, but the very essence of their congregational doctrines was the self-government of each parish or church. The development of the New England town meeting, which has been called democracy in its purest form, rose side by side with the meeting of the village church. In short, these forefathers of ours determined to govern themselves in their relations to one another and to their God.

They realized, moreover, that their ministers would be unable to lead or their children to follow if they could not read or write. The establishment of schools, such as the Boston Latin School in 1635, and Harvard College in 1636, took place in due time. One of the essentials of Calvinism was that its adherents should read the Bible daily. Without schools, such devotion was impossible. Thus began the spread of popular education in America, narrow and rudimentary in its beginnings, but far-reaching in its later scope. The traditional picture of the Massachusetts village, with the church on one side of the Common and the school house on the other, did not evolve from a mere accident.

If we agree that the development of universal education and of constitutional government is of importance to the world, we in Massachusetts may be forgiven if we commemorate publicly an event that contributed so strongly to the forwarding of these principles. The Puritans need no excuses. We ourselves should ask forgiveness if we fail to look unceasingly toward a better and more gracious world—the culmination of their work in a wilderness three hundred years ago.

The Class Prophecy

A Confession

ABBOTT W. LEONARD, '30.

Being a natural-born liar, and having an almost extinct ability to make things seem just as they aren't, the Steele Collar Company in 1947, ordered me to travel to different points to show the general public that Steele Collars did not pinch the Adam's apple, that they did not have the tendency of sliding up over the ears, that they had a rubber inner tube which allowed the neck to expand painlessly when laughing, and that they cost only twenty-five cents, except west of the Three-Mile River where they were slightly higher. Accordingly, I packed my other shirt and tie and set out for my first stop, Lima, (which rivaled Boston as a bean city). This marked the beginning of the end.

Arriving at Lima, I disembarked from my freight car and entered the booming bean burrough. Very thirsty from swallowing highlyseasoned cinders, I first went to Robert Francis' drug store and asked for a chaser. Mr. Francis didn't translate the word "chaser" correctly, for he sicced on me Chief of Police Edward McAloon, who happened to be drinking a glass of soda. I beat it out of the store, and finally eluded the "chaser" by slipping into Lawrence O'Brien's high-hat haberdashery. That worthy gent refused to buy collars on the grounds that they weren't government inspected. Passing out of the store and up the street I saw many familiar names on signboards. Among them were: "Charles Baylies-Confectioner-Authority on Sweets and Sweet Things"; "Lawrence Morse-Fruits of all Kinds and Konditions"; Russell Myers-Electrical Appliances-Come In and Let Us Give You a Thrill"; "Edward Owen-Tables and Chairs-Let Us Repair Your Legs"; "Harry Dustin-Mind Reading-Star Gazing-Your Past Before Your Eyes"; and "Richard Knowles-Justice of the Fees—Give Me a Trial". After seeing these signs, I had to go to the "Hit the Deck Tea House", owned and operated by the Gold-dust twins, Ruth Knowles and Eleanor Hopkins, to get a rest and a cup of coffee.

Among the distinguished personages seated 'round the festive board (lingo a la Major Hoople) were Dorothy Hood, a famous cough doctor (she made people cough up dough); Mary Kenyon, who ran many things in the town, among them being her husband; Esther O'Connor and Marguerite Martin, insurance agents, (and how they could talk!); Anita Pavese, who owned a jewelry store (a very good stringer was she); and Rita Shumway and Leona Rodier, style experts, who at that time were attempting to prove that Cleopatra wore long evening gowns and not short ones, as Eric Denhoff, famous Latin expert and very ancient history authority had previously claimed (he hadn't quoted reasons for his stand, however). After listening to soup music for an hour I paid for the check (and that year's taxes) and left.

Haram was the next stop. That thriving metropolis boasted of many manufacturing concerns. Among them were: The Dynamic Handkerchief Company, owned by George Pratt; the Compressed Steele Cuspidor Corporation, manufacturers of household necessities, run by Graham Lovely; the Inferno Saxophone Company, headed by David Cohen: the Vesuvius Seegar Company, with Donald Dill as its guiding light; and the Hole-In-One Hosiery Company, run by Donald Woodward. The Artificial Flowers Company, under Roger Martin, and the Inlaid Casket Corporation, owned by Richard Perry, had recently merged to serve one cause in the best way possible. Having inspected several of these million-dollar factories, I went to Lemmie Inn managed by Wilbur White, wealthy oil magnate, (he slung the old oil). In the lobby were Jimmy Agrella, a big butter and egg man who owned several ranches out West, George Lewis, director of an orchestra called "The Mysterious Nine", (they had good reasons for not wanting the public to know who played the instruments of torture), and Morrill Martin, who played first ukulele in the Walla Walla Symphony Orchestra, (boy, he could hit high G!).

While talking with these gentlemen, in walked Barbara King, a famous sculptress with a stony stare, Sylvia Stefanie, editor of "The Nation's Perfume", a magazine with a distinctive air; Madeleine Storey, a dietitian off on an 18-day riot, and Dorothy Gifford, who owned several cloak stores (she was excellent at wrapping people). As I needed a shave, I beat it to the Venus Beauty Shoppe, mishandled by Alice Hambly and Ronald Marshall. When I came out twenty minutes later the Salvation Army was selling poppies for disabled vets. Commander Abiather White happened to come along just then, and, taking one look at my face, gave me a complimentary poppy. Since the poppy made me more dopey than usual, I went into Raymond Gauthier's blooming flower shop and bought a buttonhole buttercup. The most of the day was spent in touring the city in one of Eino Silvan's Hispano Sneezers (it also coughed a lot). Before leaving the city that night Mayor Alexander MacDonald gave me the keys to the city, but the wouldn't fit the lock. No collars were sold in Haram—the merchants were too sensible.

At Hannibal, the next stop, there was a big political rally. In the center of the green presented to the town by Vernon Stead, famous astronomer who claimed that Orion wore suspenders instead of a belt, was a platform, and on the platform was Hollis Cranmer, president of the Society for the Prevention of Horse Stealing, town dog-catcher, and a director of the local Five and Dime. After a red-hot speech, very Selectmen Isadore Silverman, Joseph McMorrow, and Howard Rosenfeld gave stirring addresses which had the people doing the hornpipe. When they all began to sputter about a raise in pay, however, there was a general riot, and Constables Albert Hoxie and Ernest Stone were forced to call out the town fire volunteers under Roland Ring to throw pails of water on the fiery mob. Seeing that no collars could be sold during such a shindig, I retired—very much dampened.

It was a rough train ride from Hannibal to Bismarck. The joltings of the train threw me against a very indignant guy, who proved to be Jerry Downing, a newspaper correspondent for "The Pampa Toreador", that town's official bull thrower. Lucienne Galipeau. efficiency expert for the Mortle Cough Syrup Company; Frederick Rheaume, a salesman for the Bigge, Bunyon Company, Manufacturers of corn plasters; Esther Packard, a juvenile story-writer specializing in Peter Rabbitt goo; Madeleine Poole, Jean Hart, and Eloise Young, actresses for the Sleepy Hollow Sound Company (producers of canned pictures), owned by Arnold Freeman and Thomas Donahue; Eugenia Concordia and Phyllis Cushman, artists for the Compressed-Air Waffle Company, operated by Ernest Bromley; and Eleanor Molfenter, a poetess who wrote soul-wringing (and clothes wringing) poetry, were also among those present—here and there. Just as the train was passing Burlap, the conductor came in for fares: somebody jumped out the window-it was Paul MacKendrick, a bombing instructor at Sing-Sing (he had exploded several theories and a couple dormitories—in Sing Sing of course).

Medusa. I found several brilliant and well-known people there. For instance there were George Bauer, owner of many famous horses—used for glue; Joseph Braga, Chairman of the committee for the suppression of fish horns; Leon Soule, a violent politician who believed in suffrage for women and plenty of it; Earl Simmons and Francis Murphy, inventors of a roller skate which can not slip out from under you-maybe; Arthur Champney, an advertising agent for the Buhl Milk Company; and Benjamin Friedman, who was president of a large deaf and dumb school (they put him there to see if it could keep him still for a minute). Helen Castro and Gertrude Flood were showing good head-work in their Cranium Hat Shoppe; and Rose Silvia, Ruth Pratt, and Emily Christenson were the officers of the Ladies' Domestic Mutual Benefit Society, which served a supper to the Men's Club, headed by the famous Roger Kierstead, Chicken magnate every Friday night, pocketbook permitting. (After the supper diapepsin tablets were served, and the band usually struck up "Oh Why Did I Do It?"). Gladys Perry and Alice Pero were both steamed up over their new Hellespont Cooking School (the whole town, in fact, was fired), while Clara Baker and Loretta McHugh looked very sweet in their Krazy Kat Kendy Kitchen, (the town gang often collected in this store to chewthe rag). After inspecting some of these places, I proceeded to Schnapp's Dry Goods Store (somewet) to see if Manager Floyd Allen would take a chance on some collars. Nope, the people in that town wore bandanas around their necks-collars had to be washed. That spot on the map was vacated tout de suite, (a Spanish idiom).

Bonanza, the next landing place, was practically run—and ruined—by women. There were: Mayoress Mary Curtin; Councilwomen Kathryn Duffee, Anna Golen, and Helen Murray; and City Clerkess Dora Young. Clarke Fiske was City Treasuress, (the city was rich—once upon a time), while Hope Tullock and Minnie Wolfe were the City Assessoresses (and how they assessoressed!). Dorothy Platt, Della Schwab, and Genevieve Ploska served (ice cream) on the Board of Health, Mildred Canham and Beatrice Farrell oversaw the poor (translated from the Yiddish, that means that they were the Overseers of the Poor), while Nedra Marotte and Anna King were the guiding forces of the Department of Physical Culture. It has been justly said that women have their weigh, and it was so in this case. Since the style experts decreed (yeah?) low necks, these Didos would not allow the local merchants to buy any collars, and when I began to argue, Chiefess of Police Alice Russell McKenna ran me out of town.

Cicero, a buzzing place, boasted of a population of ten thousand (counting animals). Among the distinguished citizens that I unearthed there were Rita Walsh and Grace Byrne, two leading club women of the Montauk Bridge Club (once in a while they led hearts); Blanche Cooper, owner of a string of bead shops; Samuel Forman, the town seer and weather forecaster (once in a great while the weather was just as he said it would be); Robert Cavanagh, Edward Plonka, and Edward Thomas, who carried a lot of weight in the iron industry, being the owners of the Cass Iron Corporation; Edith Reid and Alice Shawcross, who owned, to put it paintedly, several art (?) galleries; Maybelle Paling and Elsie O'Boyle, noted musicians (they could play the victrola, music-box, player-piano, and Jewish harp); and Antone Rose and Edward Pietras, sole and lasting proprietors of the Bute Shoe Company. Noela Doyle and Eva Gagnon scraped along in their manicure parlor nailing customers here and there; Stanley Foster was an outstanding dentist with a big pull in the old town, (the yanks are coming!); while Mary Alvarnaz and Harriet Taylor were the principals of the Jale Grammar School and the Greke Grammar School, respectively, (they as a rule, ruled with their rulers). Having been shown over the city by Arthur Silvia, inventor of a nickle-in-the-slot machine that would really work, I ankled over to Robert Tarr's important Emporium with the usual line about Steele collars. Too badall his customers bought shirts with soft collars. Irene Walker and Velda Wright who owned the only other clothing store in the town refused to buy any collars on the grounds that it wasn't customary for ladies to wear men's collars, (oh yes! theirs was a dress shop). So it was a case of goodbye, Cicero.

There was a woman's convention at Pandora. Manager Thomas Clemmey had kindly lent his Imperial Palace Theatre to the ladies, and when I got there it sounded like a sewing machine. Having a few minutes to spare, I sneaked through one of the fire escapes and entered the theatre. Women certainly like to talk—they did in this case anyway. At last the meeting was called to order by Chairwoman Miriam Babbitt, who, after a lot of where-as-ing introduced the first speaker on the program, Margaret Clark, educator and business woman, who at present was minding her own business. I went to sleep. When I woke up an hour later, Catherine Morlock and Myrtle Johnson were giving an imitation of two fillulu birds, and when Evelyn Mattos and Mary Nelson, accompanied by Mary McCarthy on the harmonica, began to yodel some elegies, it was too much-I scrammed. I was in such a hurry that I almost knocked over Susan McKenna, a kindergarten teacher, and Ruth Mosher, ditto, who were in a corner telling each other Scotch jokes.

Pandora had many beautiful shops, and I took much pleasure (sez you!) in window shopping. Mildred Potter and Grace Rounds, for instance, ran an up-to-date department store, specializing in ribbons, laces, and other doodads and gadgets; Marguerite Smith and Gertrude Wilson ran a book shop, selling funeral cards, thank-you cards, and come-again-when-you-can't-stay-so-long cards; Helen Davis and Mary Cronan owned a hardware store, specializing in paints and powders; while Gertrude Copeland and Louise Miller managed their ice-cream parlor with very cool judgment. Leo Boudreau owned a sporting-goods store, selling everything from sport cars to sporty ties; Samuel Knox tried to fool the people by selling home-made antique furniture in his modern antique furniture shop (fat people always made the chairs look old and wobbly); and John Lawson's music store was the howl of the town, (Mr. Lawson was a most accomplished whistler and singer—he practiced a lot in school, ya know). While excalating along the boulevard, I dropped into several different clothing stores to try to sell some collars and get a commission big enough to go to the movies, but always it was the same old fairy tale, "Sorry, but we already sell fifteen other makes."-Donkey fuzz!

A little later I went over to the post office to fill my fountain pen. There Postmaster Charles De Young handed me a letter which had been waiting there for some time, but I didn't bother to open it. After telling the latest traveling-salesman joke to Mr. De Young, I left the post-office and Pandora with a full fountain pen and an empty stomach.

The train from Pandora to Squedunk was packed with women returning from the annual get-together party of "The Chatterbox Club" (an all-talking society—et comment, as they say in Turkey). Some of the women who were trying to talk as if they were going up a hill in second, were Edna Barber, Mildred Boucher, and Helena Zagrodny, politicians, who when they talked flung their hands around as though they had rolling pins in them; Frances Tutton and Elaine Weygand, two very capable women-brokers who could break anything from news to a twenty-dollar bill (out of circulation); Sydel Swig and Dorothy Westgate, just a coupla librarians away from their tomes, (that is speaking volumes); Marjorie Williams and Anna Nozko, the superintendents of a telephone exchange, (what a line they had!); and Alice Page, Lillian Rochette, and Josephine Galligan, the very private secretaries of the officers of the Mawthbawl Radio Corporation, (their loudspeakers were in good shape, but there were no volume controls!); Marian Bartel. Dorothy McEwan, and Helen Keating, joint owners of a Swedish massage institute using the German method, (there's the rub.) were off in a corner comparing notes, while Alice Boylen and Dorothy Dooley, collectors of rare art, were chinning over the original picture of Andy Gump which they had just bought, (no price given).

Seeing that this was no man's land, I gamboled to the smoker where I puffed for the rest of the siesta.

Squedunk was a nize place. Shrubs here, flowers there, and wait a minute-some more shrubs. A few of the best shrubs located in the principal park were the Bellamy Biennial Brancher, named after Enid Bellamy, a noted botanist, White's Whittling Stick, dedicated to Glennice White, a very active bugologist, Goff's Gay Gamboler, a compliment to Jeanette Goff, well-known landscrape gardener, Brown's Blooming Blighter, perfected by Charlotte Brown, owner of the Bird Seed Company, Horton's Horticultural Howl, presented to the town by Virginia Horton, a collector of orchids, daisies, dandelions, and other rare flowers, and Cronan's Crumbling Creeper, named for Marguerite Cronan, world-renowned authority on flowers and budding youth, (these here shrubs sound like they might be funny lookingwell, they was). The best flowers naked (oh my!) to the eye were: Burgess's Big Bunker, named after Mary Burgess, State Inspector of Flours, Labrie's Little Lalipaloosa, bearing the name of Madeleine Labrie, whose beautiful gardens are well known in rabbit circles; Rideout's Riot Runner, a spontaneous and fast-growing plant named after Martha Rideout, official botanist for Sing Sing; Potter's Phainting Pherry, a plant baptized for Thelma Potter, a perfume manufacturer of Smelt, France; Swift's Spondiferous Sprig, a flower with much incense, (best when burned) originated by Edith Swift, owner of a chain of flower shops; and Vero's Voluminous Vapex, a multi-colored posey dedicated to Mary Vero, author of a flower guide which many authorities on birds claim is the best book on dogs ever written by a cat expert. All these botanical bluffs were sights for sore eyes—they made 'em sorer.

Squedunk had an artist's colony. Norma Carney painted land-scapes—the type in which the farmer is taking another load of hay away; Doris Stuart painted portraits, (for the funny papers). Carmela Welsh was most proficient at pattern designing, (she had good designs); Dorothy Creighton painted dawgs, hosses, wagons, and signboards, Leslie Gilson painted futuristic pictures—the kind which contain a lot of squirligigs and curleycues and don't mean much, while Anna Ludovicz's cover designs had a lot of publicity, (never mind what kind). It took quite a little time to inspect this colony and the shrubs and flowers.

There also seemed to be a rage for tea rooms in Squedunk, which happened to be situated on the main road from Warp to Woof.

Goodell's Grab Box, owned by Elinor Goodell, active club woman, (and how!), Marsden's Masticating Parlor, run by Agnes Marsden, another woman good with the clubs; Rabello's Welsh Rabbit Kennel, operated by Eleanor Rabello, fool connoisseur, (oh Min!); Stack's Soup Sifter, handled by Rose Stack, another one of those French things; O'Connell's Omelet Opera, managed by Ruth O'Connell, a novelist in her off moments; King's Meating House, a very nize place owned by Helen King, rug collector, (linoleum excluded); Goldstein's Greenwich Village Folly, managed by Violet Goldstein, once a teacher but now more sensible; McManus Molar Mart, directed by Marguerite McManus, a dog financier; Roger's Regal Diner, under the head of Irene Rogers, owner of a cat menagerie; and Kingsbury's Kopper Kettle, owned by Ruth Kingsbury, an art collector, were all striving to give the most people the most indigestion.

The town newspaper, "The Daily Enquirer", was, as the title suggests, run mostly by women, (typesetters, etc. excluded). Vivian Pimental was the editoress, Amelia Robinson the bizness manager, Ruth Rounds the food circulation manager, Muriel Thompson was Gossip editor, Rose Pinheiro fashion editor, Bertha Santos city (?) editor, and Edith Selwood ran the cooking department and household squints. No gossip got by this newspaper.

After examining this plant, I went to the Ritz Hotel, managed by Herbert Molden, who owned a large chain of hotels. There I pinched the town's social register and gave it the once over. Among the prominent citizens of the town that I found listed there were Doris Grinnell, superintendent of the Joan d'Arc Hospital; Margaret Roberts, social worker for the Opium Drug Company; Ellen Sheehy, wealthy owner of the Dentid Tin Company, manufacturers of brass tacks; Margaret Hancock, a far-sighted optometrist, (quite a good looker); Francis Patrick, headmaster of the Demosthenes' Debating Debunkers. Since the people of the town knew how to talk very well, Mr. Patrick was about as optimistic as a horse fly at an auto show. In the Blue Book I found Anna Stafonwic, once a professor of economies at Edinburgh University (Scotland), but now a state auditor; Vesta Goodwin, an interior decorator, (no, she didn't run a restaurant); Christine Shea, one of the town's most prominent divorce lawyers; and Lillian Israel, who owned much real and unreal estate in the town, (very sharp on flats).

Having glanced over the social register, I took the letter from my pocket and opened it. It read as follows:

The Steele Collar Co., 7734 Fruit St., Winooski, Wis. June 27, 1947

Wher evver youse are.

Deer (?) Ser:

I heer that youse is havin a gran time, yes? Cut it. Where's the sails? Where's the dough? What are youse doin with our jack? Cum back. Youse have gone to fur. Who has been spending all our dough? Youse, who has been loafin on the job? Youse, Who has not kep his word? Youse, Who has been actin like a phule?

Yours truly,

Amigo Spagett, General Manager.

P. S.—I have bot a new shot gun; will meat you at the trane. I didn't go back.

THE END

AS FRIEND TO FRIEND

Rondeau

If few remember me today,
Or wish I hadn't gone away,
Or, thinking of me, wonder where
I am, or how my fortunes fare,
Or friendly interest display
In aught I do, I can but say
I should be sorry, in a way,
Yet no resentment shall I bear,
If few remember me.

Let them forget, for though I may
Have lost nigh all that vast array
Of friends I thought were past compare,
What's that to me? I shall not care;
I ought to grieve; but I'll be gay
If you remember me.

PAUL L. MACKENDRICK.

Ye Class Will

We, the Class of nineteen hundred and thirty, of Taunton High School, in ye County of Bristol, do declare this our last Will and Testament in the manner and form following:

To Mr. Ward and the teachers we bequeath our sincere appreciation for their four years of patient guidance under the greatest of difficulties.

To the Class of 1931 we leave the much-desired privilege of attending assemblies with all the ceremony accorded Seniors.

To the Class of 1932, we leave the honor of following in our illustrious footsteps.

To the Class of 1933 we leave the encouragement that what seems like eternity is really only four years.

Marguerite Cronan: To any Junior I leave my front seat in American History with the warning that silence is golden when there are visitors in the class.

Mary Curtin: To Irving Swig, '32, I bequeath some of my icy reserve to tone down his buoyancy.

To Dick, my esteemed brother of '32, I leave my faculty for concocting snappy arguments with Mr. Walker.

To all under-classmen as a whole, I leave my ingenious method of distinguishing teachers from pupils: Look for the red rank book.

Jean Hart: To Virginia Hutchinson, '32, I bequeath my corner seat in Room 102 at which location the occupant can get away with murder, if not indulged in more than once a day.

To Gene Syms, '31, I leave my daily stick of chewing gum, that he may have the pleasure of irritating his teachers the first three periods, pausing momentarily for lunch, and resuming action at 10.55.

Virginia Horton: To Harriet Carter, '31, I leave the privilege of holding up the railing at the entrance to the Girls' lunchroom, and of introducing rules of etiquette to the new "sophies".

To Jeanette Eldridge, '31, I leave some of my common sense to aid her in her many emotional moments.

Sam Knox: I will to Gene Syms the much coveted honor of being guardian of the muzzle in a certain algebra class.

Ruth Knowles: I will the next fortunate senior my front seat in 106, with a good view of the passing throng.

Roger Kierstead: I bestow on my good friend, Mr. Arnold Kerry, my place in the Taunton High School "band". He may also have my tuba and may the Almighty bless him when he tries to play the infernal thing.

To the Y. M. C. A. I leave a new chair to replace the one Hollis Cranmer and I broke while listening to one of Dick Knowles' "funny" stories at a Hi-Y meeting.

George Lewis: To Barbara Beers, '32, I leave my front seat in Miss Stone's English Class and my amazing ability to memorize Macheth

To the next baritone player in the band I will the dregs of my bottle of silver polish, to be used faithfully before any and all public appearances.

Paul MacKendrick: To Arnold Kerry, '31, I leave my best wishes for a lieutenant-colonelcy.

To Charles Cain, '32, I leave my passionate love for Latin, to make his path through Cicero and Virgil less difficult, with a heartfelt regret that I can't bequeath him something more tangible—a trot, for instance.

Nedra Marotte: To Rita Sawyer, '32, I kindly bestow my really amazing ability of growing whenever I desire.

Alice McKenna: To my sister Betty, '31, I leave my front seat in Latin which affords an unobstructed view of a certain well-known picture which may or may not be a still-life study of spinach.

To Margaret Mahan, '31, I leave my unrivaled position as motion-seconder in the school clubs.

Loretta McHugh: I leave to Patricia Smith, '31, my post as sentry in the lunchroom with the advice that she enforce the rules as rigidly as I have.

Abbott Leonard: To that Indian in the wonderful picture in 104 I bequeath a rocking chair to sit down and take a rest in. (Won't somebody help him get that lily?)

Della Schwab: To Margaret Rideout of '31, I will in 103 my desk (near enough to enable me to whisper my asides loud enough to be heard by teacher only), and my own individual way of explaining Comus and Macbeth.

To some lucky member of the class of '31, I will my post in 202 every morning between 7.50 and 8.05 A. M. He is to report every day except Sundays and holidays, and under no consideration is he (or she) to allow a certain teacher to start the day wrong. Although he will be a poor substitute, I cannot allow the teacher to remain alone so long in the morning unless I know she will be well protected and entertained. Girl Preferred.

Madeleine Story: I leave my most superior position in the monkey cage to the next unfortunate monkey.

Elaine Weygand: To Marjory Waldron, '31, I leave one large can of Dutch Cleanser with which to lighten her task of cleaning the keys of our ancient piano.

Howard Rosenfeld: To the next Business Manager of the Tauntonian I will my supply of valid excuses for making extended calls every recess. Also I leave my remarkable record of having been in my home room only three recesses during the whole year.

This, our last Will and Testament, we do declare by Setting our hand and Seale unto ye Date of yeare above said.

P. L. McK.: "I say, M---, I have tickets for the theatre."

M. R.: "Splendid. I'll start dressing".

P. L. McK .: "Yes do, dear. They're for tomorrow."

The old-fashioned girl certainly knew how to get a dinner. The modern girl does too, but she uses a different method.

Dorothy: I just adore dark men.

Roger: You'd have a big time in Africa.

Jokes

Husband: "I've just got to get rid of my chauffeur. He's nearly killed me four times."

Wife: "Oh, give him another chance."

Jim: "Can you imagine anyone going to bed with his shoes on?"

Tom: "No, who does it?"

Jim: "My horse!"

Teacher (to student): "Put this in Shakesperian language: Here comes a bowlegged man'."

Agrella: "Behold! What is this approaching me in parentheses?"

Miss Crosby to the little boy who was waving his hand frantically: "All right, Lawson, you tell us what a groundhog is."

Lawson: "Please, ma'am, it's a sausage."

Cronan: "Can you let me have a caddie who doesn't giggle all the time?"

Caddie Master: "Well, there's old Mac over there who hasn't smiled for forty years, but I can't guarantee him."

Sergeant: "Got that floor scrubbed yet?"

Recruit: "No."

Sergeant: "No what?" Recruit: "No soap."

* Most men call a spade a spade until they happen to drop one on their toes.

Two boys were out hunting in the woods, and one of them stopped and picked up a chestnut burr.

"Tommy," He called excitedly, "Come here. I've found a porcupine egg."

Ruth, did you hear the stepladder fall?

Yes, mummy.

I hope Dick hasn't fallen.

Not yet, he's still hanging by his belt to the picture hook.

Madeline—How old is that lamp?

Sylvia—Three years.

Madeline-Well, turn it down, it's entirely too young to smoke.

Colonel (to rookie): And the next time I see you I hope you will be a second lieutenant.

Rookie: Thank you, sir, same to you.

What is you all doing now, Rastus?

I'se a cafeteria blacksmith.

What do you do?

I shoo flies.

Jean: "Am I the first girl you ever kissed?"

Vernie: "Of course you are! Why is it that you girls all ask the same question?"
